

oldest, then Satira, Samuel, Julia, Kissie, Kelly, Carrie, (all old fashioned and odd names) Beaugard (named in honor of General Beaugard), Cecelia, Rebecca, Magdalena (we called her Margie), Mary Jane (myself, of course), Mattie Bell, William Thomas, Monday (a common S. C. name)

Johnson: What do you suppose it was - you had no one to suggest this to you originally, that you desired something better than you were getting. Most children born in situations like this accept this as their lot in life and never feel any different about it.

Johnson: My mother said when I was born I was entirely different from the others. I was the most homely child, I was just different. In the ordinary things the children engaged in I wouldn't. I had the type of leadership like mother. She said I was just different from the others. My taste for food was different. I would just look at it and not eat it. I had my own ideas about even that. I had just a different setting (?) in my acceptance of things from the rest of the children, and she very early detected that I was just a little different.

My older sisters wanted to get married early. I had no in-

Handwritten notes on the left margin: "Scholar", "D", "P", "H", "V", "L", "2", "K".